

Cordell Christian Home's Resident's Digest

For the past 12 weeks, the Cordell Christian Home has been informing the community, through the Resident's Digest articles, how we currently operate and how we will operate in the future. We have been getting excellent feedback from the community, residents, and staff about how much they have learned through these articles. Community members are now excited and eager to learn more about the home's present and future goals and objectives.

When the new building project is finished the atmosphere will be more calming for the elders. However, the greatest change and improvement will not only be a physical one. The relationships that are developing and will continue to grow from this new way of caring will be priceless. Residents and staff are becoming more comfortable with each other, the community is getting even more in touch with our residents' daily lives, and family appreciation for staff has increased as their roles and duties are more clearly explained and understood. The future of CCH includes not only building stronger facilities, but also strengthening family ties.

The change from the old way of caring to the new way of caring has already begun in CCH. We can already see what the future is going to bring to our residents, staff, and community. The Cordell Christian Home was one of the state's first elderly care homes and will again be one of the first to change to the new caring philosophy. Calls have come in from the community offering their support and questions about our new renovations. Many have even offered their ideas. Everyone at CCH knows that this new change will not be possible without the support and appreciation of the great people within our community.

This article is the end of the Cordell Christian Home's 12 week informative series. However, this does not stop the invitation that we give the community to call or stop by to check things out for yourself. We hope your questions about what is and what will be have been answered throughout the last 12 weeks. CCH would love for you to keep reading the Residents Digest for updates on our residents, activities, and special events. Information about our building project will also be made available throughout the process. So, keep reading and we will talk to you soon!
